STE. GENEVIEVE. - MISSOURL

Blind Leaders of the Blind, About this season of the revolving year people are wont to smile because the school boy, who hasn't as yet meeting plished a year of hard work in all his life, rises up in his place, and with a proud heart and tremulous knees, reads an essay on "The Dignity of Labor." Or because another boy, seventeen years old, who hasn't read a newspaper in ten weeks and has little more idea of what is going on in America than he has of what is going on in Heaven, delivers an oration on the "Perils of the Republic." Or because the "loudest" dressed girl in the class, with a voice like a man and a face of brass, reads an essay on "Mod-esty the True Sign of Merit." Or because some other girl, sixteen years old, who eats four meals a day and has never known a care or sorrow all her days. reads an affecting and mournful essay about "The Discipline of Affliction," unseen and wander heart-broken and lonely down the neglected paths of Life with a big L. We are ant to laugh at all these things, because we flink the young people are considerably beyond their depth, and we know that some day-

Ah man, we can stand the soft purring of the contented cat; it is the youl of the ambitious champion of the woodshed that we account distasteful. And "this palaver of lovers," why certes, it is but sounding brass and tinkling cymbals to the ears of a married man forty-eight years old, who has to buy shoes for eight, but bless you, the young people who make the palaver like it, and it is intended for no other ears than theirs alone. If you don't like it, don't listen

On near approach to the wire these little jets of flame could be plainly observed. They presented the appear-ance of little electrified brushes or inverted cones of light—or more properly little funnels of light with their points to the line, from which they issued in little streams about the size of a pencil lead and of the brightest violet color, while the cone of ravs was of a brilliant rosewhite color.

These little funnels of light pointed from the line in all directions and were sonstantly jumping from point to point.
There was no heat to the light, though t was impossible to touch one of these little flames, for as soon as they were approached by the finger they would in-stantly vanish or jump to another point on the line. Passing along the line with finger extended these little jets of flame were successively "puffed out," so to were successively "puffed out," so to speak, to be instantly relighted in the boiled beets, also chopped and seasoned; rear.
